INGLÊS

TEXT FOR QUESTIONS 01 AND 02

Ages ago, I acquired two recordings that inspire a feeling of weirdness whenever I listen to them, or even think about them. Both are performances of the great Lerner and Loewe musical My Fair Lady in languages other than English. Each of them has a special twist of irony. At the core of the original story is how the coarse Cockney girl Liza Doolittle is as a challenge, taken in by the insufferably smug but utterly enthralled professor Henry Higgins, and through painful exercises — “The rain in Spain falls mainly in the plain” — acquires such an impeccably upper-class Oxbridge way of speaking English that at her (and his) ultimate test, a posh ball that she attends incognito, drifting among the cream of British society, the keenest linguistic sleuth in the land dances with this mysterious beauty and in the end declares her too good to be true, and hence not English elite at all, but Hungarian! The whole idea of de-anglicizing this story strikes me as really nutty — and yet there they are, those recordings on my shelf. And so, on what wet plains do those heavy, drenching rains mainly fall, in Mi Bella Dama? (...)

New York: Basic Books, 1997, p. 198 (adapted)

On the previous text and the vocabulary used in it, judge the items below:

- 01. In the text, the word “twist of irony” can be replaced by “a matter of destiny”
- 02. The word “nutty” is used to express something unpleasant

TEXT FOR QUESTIONS 03 AND 04

Technology and globalized commerce allowed them to find a cheap supplier of decent-quality razors, outsource back-office work, advertise their wares on social media for a song, and sell them directly to consumers on the internet thanks to merchant platforms like Shopify and payment processors such as Stripe. In six years, their firm, Harry’s, has carved out 4.3% of America’s $2.2bn men’s razor market from the likes of Gillette, whose share has fallen from 73% to 53% since 2009, according to Euromonitor International, a market-research firm.

Such success stories give bosses of consumer-facing multinationals in America and beyond the heebie-jeebies. Last year Procter & Gamble (p&g) admitted Gillette was perhaps not the best it could get by taking an $8bn write-down on the brand, which it bought in 2005 for $57bn. From industry to industry insurgent labels seem to be eating incumbents’ lunch.

A brand new world. In: The Economist, 23/01/2020 (adapted).

On the previous text and the vocabulary used in it, judge the items below:

- 03. In the text, the word “wares” can be replaced by commodities
- 04. In the last sentence of the text, “insurgent” is another way to say “rebel”

TEXT FOR QUESTIONS 05 AND 06

- 05. In the cartoon, the student saying to the teacher “Go to the board and explain again, please.”
- 06. Judge the item below
The cartoon suggests that the boy spurns to write on the board.

TEXT FOR QUESTIONS 07 AND 08

Coronavirus deaths climb as China corrals sick in quarantine facilities

Although Wuhan and Hubei province remain ravaged by the disease, officials say the number of new cases outside Hubei is declining, in a reflection of strict quarantine measures taking effect nationwide. In: The Washington Post, 10/02/2020

On the previous text and the vocabulary used in it, judge the items below:

- 07. In the first line, the word "ravaged" can be replaced by warworn"
- 08. It is said in the text that quarantine measures are coming in force

TEXT FOR QUESTIONS 09 AND 12

According to a research by the University of York, eyebrows have been crucial to human evolution because it's how our ancestors first learnt to communicate and work together.

In arriving at their findings, researchers discounted two other common theories for our ancestors' protruding brow (being that it protected their skull while chewing on tough meals and filled the gap between their eye sockets and brain due to their much larger faces).

The team carried out their study by creating a 3D model of the fossilised skull of Kabwe-1, which lived between 200,000 and 700,000 years ago, which is currently housed at the Smithsonian. As a result, it's believed that our ancestors lost their distinctive brow bridges so that they could convey more nuanced messages, such as anger, frustration and recognition.

In: The Short News, 13/04/2018

On the previous text and the vocabulary used in it, judge the items below:

- 09. Eyebrows evolution chipped in with human evolution
- 10. The first communication way noticed was eyebrows contact
- 11. A 3D skull fossilized model was created to be studied at Smithsonian
- 12. Our ancestors have strayed some abilities

TEXT FOR QUESTIONS 13 AND 16

The past decade saw our awareness of our collective travelers' carbon footprint rise. It also gave rise to the #hashtag travel generation in which some of us based our itinerary decision on the "Instagramability" of a place. Camping became glamping. Vacation morphed into staycation. And #Vanlife earned its hashtag. Now that we've slid into 2020, what will the new year bring us in terms of travel? How will the trends of the last year and decade evolve and shape the way we travel in 2020 and beyond?

In: Newsweek, 01/02/2020

On the previous text and the vocabulary used in it, judge the items below:

- 13. In the text, "#hashtag travel generation" refers to the word "awareness"
- 14. The term "instagramability" is playing up its social media in the text
- 15. The expression "we've slid into 2020" is used to express the 2020 arrival
- 16. In the last sentence of the text, "evolve" can be replaced by evolution without changing the meaning of the sentence

TEXT FOR QUESTIONS 17 AND 20

Technical Support

"Your operating system was installed on April 25th, which makes your computer a Taurus. As a Pisces, you're bound to have conflicts."

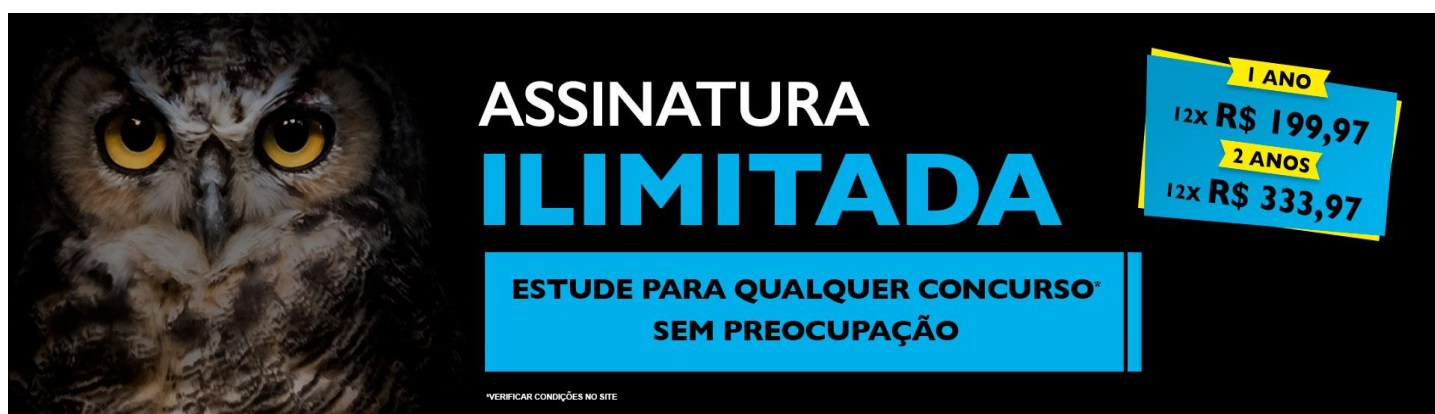

- 17. The operating system did not carry on and caused some conflicts.
- 18. The cartoon talks about zodiac signs in a technology context.
- 19. In the cartoon, it is shown that the date of the system installation influences on its technological problems and conflicts.
- 20. The term "bound" is expressing that someti
